

Caitlyn Crisp
The Lemon Effect

The project, "The Lemon Effect," is about testing to see if lemon juice from a fresh lemon can clean stains. I predicted that it would because the acid in lemon juice could break down the dirt and take it away. I would put ketchup, coffee, used motor oil, and black ink on a piece of light carpet and let it soak in and stain it. Then, I would attempt to clean the substances off with some lemon juice. I concluded that lemon juice does help take off some stains. Some stains would be easier to get out than others. The lemon juice did not quite take out all the stains, but it took out a good majority of it.