

Engineering vs. Experimental

Measures a prototype's ability to pass numerous design criteria	Typically only measures one factor
Changes numerous factors as new prototypes are built	Typically changes only one factor
Keeps trying to build a better prototype until time or money is exhausted or no further improvements can be made in the prototypes	Project has a definite end in sight
Conclusion is supported by whether the design criteria passed or failed	Conclusion is either supported or not supported by the data collected